

The idea is to have a few short loop walks for people with mobility issues. At this time, these loops are not wheelchair accessible, or walker friendly.

On the lake side the trail has lots of roots, but getting to walk along the lake is lovely.

On the east side of the Chadburn Lake Road, the Yellow trail is wide and more easy than the rooty lake side. Walking on the needle-strewn path is a tranquil experience.

As part of the Chadburn Lake Management Plan there was an idea of corralling in the parking spread along the lake — the practice of connecting small parking spots and making larger parking areas. Many seem to feel building fires all along this area is part of the experience.

In the future, perhaps a gravel pathway along the lake will be part of the solution here.
